Hogan Guards boss makes case for youths' participation in sports

COMPETITIVE inter-school sports is a good way to build character, sportsmanship and teamwork of Nigerian youths and give them the opportunity to develop their skills at the highest level of endeavours, Chief Executive Officer of Hogan Guards Security, Mr Paul Ibirogba, made the remarks while speaking at a grassroots football tournament for primary schools in Ijebu

Ode, Ogun State. He said Nigeria should see youths' participation in sports beyond the health and fitness benefits as the country had a lot to gain through this system. The competition, which was won by St. Matthew Anglican Primary School, Ijebu Ode was sponsored by Hogan Guards as part of its corporate social responsibility towards the company's 40th anniversary this year. The company also renovated Moslem Primary School, Ijebu Ode which hosted the competition and donated athletic and educational items to all the schools which participated in the football tournament. Ibirogba said "securing school premises should be a top priority for all concerned given the state of insecurity around the nation," adding that it was also important to give the children safety tips. The winner's trophy was presented to St. Matthew Anglican Primary School by Dr Adetunji Dawodu, chairman, Alphagate College of Health Technology, Ijebu Ode and pioneer provost, Ogun State College of Health Technology, while Brigadier-General Abiodun Quadri (retd) presented gifts to the youth referees on behalf of Hogan Guards.
